

Due to the warmer weather, there is an air quality advisory for today and tomorrow for most of the state. Air Quality is forecasted to be YELLOW, or moderate, meaning air quality is acceptable; however, there may be a moderate health concern for a small number of people who are unusually sensitive to air pollution. For these individuals it is best to limit outdoor activity.

For others, you can help keep air pollutant levels down by limiting how much you drive, wait to mow lawns either in the early morning or in the early evening, and limit wood burning.

For more information or to follow air quality through the weekend, go to <http://airnow.gov>.

